Former Montrealer Started As Stock Boy, Was Merchant Prince At 25, Left N. Y. Business Grossing $18 Million A Year

David Crystal, aged seventy-nine years, who started work at sixteen as a $2-a-week stock boy and made a fortune at thirty as a New York skirt manufacturer, died at his home. He had been ill several months.

Although he had been in semi-retirement for the past twenty-five years, Mr. Crystal remained chairman of the board of the garment firm he set up in 1905, David Crystal Inc.

Along Seventh Avenue, where survival itself is a feat, Mr. Crystal's success story is remarkable, says the New York Times. Started on a shoestring of $1,500, the business now grosses $18 million a year, making it one of the largest as well as one of the oldest clothing firms in the U. S.

He came to New York City at the age of ten from Montreal, Canada, and was graduated from high school at sixteen. He then went to work as a stock boy in a department store at $2 a week.

Not long afterward he took advantage of a $3-a-week position that had opened up at Lord & Taylor. He left there to become a salesman for a small skirt manufacturer.

With $1,500 he had saved, Mr. Crystal set up his own company at twenty-three. The plant had fifteen workers and made skirts wholesaling from $1.50 to $3.25 each. At the end of the second year he was grossing an annual $100,000, and in five years he was the largest skirt manufacturer in the business with an annual volume of $1.5 million.

At the age of thirty, Mr. Crystal considered retiring and moving to Europe where he could have comfortably sustained himself for life on his fortune. But the business had too much appeal for him, so he stayed.

At first the business was confined mostly to skirts and blouses. But in 1919 Mr. Crystal began sewing the blouses to the skirts, and he was in the dress business.

Other expansions and experiments followed. In 1937 he was licensed by A. J. Izod, a custom shirtmaker in England, to make Izod suits for women. The Crystal Company now owns the Izod firm.

In 1944, the company entered into the hazardous field of men's sport shirts — and grossed more than $1 million the first year of operation, says the New York Times. Known, too, as a pioneer in and a promoter of new fabrics, Mr. Crystal was among the first manufacturers to introduce rayon-jersey and wool-jersey dresses.

Along with the Izod Co., David Crystal, Inc., 498 Seventh Avenue, has several other wholly owned subsidiaries, including the Haymaker Corp. (separate pieces shirts, shorts, etc.), Hayette (maker of junior-size dresses), and David Crystal Dresses and Suits.

Today Crystal apparel is sold by more than 12,000 stores in the United States and the line is licensed in many countries abroad. The company grosses $18,000,000 annually.

In December, 1951, Mr. Crystal retired as president of the concern, and became board chairman. Still active in the business until recently, he divided his time between Florida and New York.

Mr. Crystal had been active in many philanthropies in the New York area and in Hollywood, Fla. He was a founder and former president of Temple Israel of New Rochelle, N. Y., and a founder of Temple Beth El of Hollywood. He was a charter member of the Quaker Ridge Country Club, Scarsdale, N. Y.

Surviving are his widow, the former Ida Garrison; two sons, Philip E. and Robert G.; two daughters, Mrs. Ruth Draddy and Mrs. Beatrice Newman; a brother, Meyer Crystal; a sister, Mrs. Fannie Graef; fifteen grandchildren, and five great-grandchildren.

When he went into semi-retirement, Mr. Crystal and his wife, the former Miss Ida Garrison, moved from New Rochelle, N. Y., to make their permanent home in Florida.

Along with an abiding interest in his business, and in all the members of his rather large family, Mr. Crystal also devoted much of his time to sports, as a participant and a spectator. An enthusiastic golfer, he was one of the founders of the Quaker Ridge Golf Club in Mamaroneck, N. Y., says the New York Times. As a spectator he liked boxing events and horse races.

For many years now the active operation of the Crystal firm has been in the hands of Mr. Crystal's son-in-law, Vincent DePaul Draddy, the president, and his two sons, Philip E. Crystal, executive vice-president, and Robert G. Crystal, secretary treasurer.

World Council Of Churches Stand, "To Resist Every Form Of Anti-Semitism", Gets Support From New Book

When the World Council of Churches recent gathering unanimously asked its 198 member Protestant and Eastern Orthodox denominations to "resist every form of anti-Semitism" wherever it is found," it repeated a 1948 stand taken by its first assembly in Amsterdam that "anti-Semitism is sin against God and man."

It said that Christian teaching should not be so presented as to fasten upon today's Jews "responsibilities which belong to our corporate humanity" in the historic events leading to the crucifixion, says the New York Herald Tribune. The measure was approved with applause after a theological flurry over whether the statement should refer to Jews as "God's chosen people."

This amendment was taken out because, it was felt, it would lead to theological tangles and the assembly would be crippled in issuing a "clear and simple word" needed in anti-Jewish situations "which continue to exist."

The Rev. Dr. John C. Bennett, dean of the faculty of Union Theological Seminary, in New York, appealed to delegates just before the vote that if the assembly spoke "with an uncertain voice" on anti-Semitism, "it would be a disaster."

"Anti-Semitism is a special responsibility of the churches because for centuries Christian teaching and Christian symbols have been wrongly used against the Jews," he said. "This cannot be taken as merely a race problem. We are dealing with a deposit of centuries of religious feeling against the Jews."

Dr. Bennett said it was "significant" that Pope John XXIII had taken references to "perfidious" Jews out of the Roman Catholic Good Friday liturgy.

The National Conference of Christians and Jews, which began a drive to eliminate references in Protestant and Roman Catholic texts and educational materials that might be considered anti-Semitic, published a book by a French historian who declares that the major persecutions of the Jews through the ages have been rooted in the teachings of Christianity.

In the book, Prof. Jules Isaac, former Inspector General of Education in France, says:

"All through my studies of this problem I have seen Christian anti-Semitism as the powerful trunk, with deep and multiple roots, upon which have been grafted other varieties of anti-Semitism, even varieties as anti-Christian as Nazi racialism."

Professor Isaac, a Jew, said he could well understand how shocking such a statement might appear to a Christian, reports the New York Times. "But is this a reason for not facing it?" he asked. "On the contrary, this should be a determining reason for making the effort of purification imposed upon the Christian conscience."

In a prefatory note, Richard Cardinal Cushing, of Boston, suggests a similar idea. The dialogue on anti-Semitism that this publication should develop, he says, "serves a useful purpose in leading us to a self scrutiny which may result in modifying our opinions or actions."

Professor Isaac said he had found in much of Christian literature "a teaching of contempt" for Jews. He appealed for a reappraisal of Jews in Christian education, and suggested a program for bringing this about.

Foremost in his recommendations was that Christian educators refrain from "the current and traditional affirmative" that the Jews killed Jesus Christ. Other things the reform should accomplish, he said, include these:

Giving to all Christians, and especially Roman Catholics, at least an elementary knowledge of the Old Testament, which was the Holy Scripture of the Jews before becoming the Holy Scripture of the Christians.

Stating explicitly that Jesus was a Jew, born of an old Jewish family, and circumcised according to Jewish Law.

Refraining from the assertion that Jesus was rejected personally by the Jewish people.

Recalling that the Jewish people transmitted to Christians the fundamental belief in God.

Dr. Lewis Webster Jones, president of the National Conference, said the organization would distribute the book to hundreds of clergymen, theologians, and writers of Christian educational texts, says the New York Times. It will also be made the subject of fifty human relations seminars on college campuses across the U.S. this summer, he added.

British Jews Are Worried Over Soviet Jews, And German Jews; Rabbis Over Here Appeal To United Nations

A call for reversal of "the present harsh measures against Jewish religion and culture" in the Soviet Union was made by the London committee of the Board of Deputies of British Jews. The Board of Deputies, established in 1760, represents groups of Jews in all parts of the country, says the New York Herald Tribune. Its president is Sir Barnett Janner, Labor Party member of Parliament.

The board described itself in a statement as deeply concerned at the imprisonment of three Soviet Jewish leaders after a secret trial recently in Leningrad. Sir Barnett told the gathering that the Jewish position is seemingly worsening.

He said a British Jewish committee had had reports of arrests of three prominent Jews in Moscow, and of the disbanding of the Vaad Yeshiva of Moscow, the governing council of the only Jewish seminary in the Soviet Union.

"We pray that these events do not foreshadow a return to the anti-Jewish atmosphere of the Stalin area," he said.

Sir Barnett also said that British Jewry remains apprehensive about the position of Jews in Germany.

"As long as any former active Nazis or members of the S. S. remain in official or other influential positions," he said, "confidence cannot be felt in the security of a democratic way of life in Germany."

Leaders of America's Orthodox Rabbis, incensed and anxious over the jailings of Jews in the Soviet Union, asked the United Nations to seek their release. A strongly worded statement, issued by the co-chairmen of the mid-winter conference of the Rabbinical Council of America, an influential organization of 800 rabbis, said, according to the New York Herald Tribune, that "the entire world can only be repelled" by the fact that religious leaders of Russia's estimated three million Jews have been incarcerated for alleged treasonable activity."

It was released by Rabbi Samuel Landa, of Ozone Park, Queens, Jewish Center, and Rabbi Fabian Schonfeld, leader of Young Israel Synagogue in Kew Gardens Hills, Queens.

The statement commended the New York Herald Tribune for exposing recent anti-Jewish incidents and arrests in the Soviet Union. The stories written last November by Rowland Evans jr., of the Herald Tribune Washington Bureau, and others that followed them, "aroused the conscience of the civilized world with regard to these grave and unjustified invasions of the basic principles of human justice," the rabbis said.

Reports that seeped through the Iron Curtain and were documented by Label A. Katz, of New Orleans, president of Bnai Brith, have told of a steady assault on Jews in the Soviet Union since last June. Incidents included a quadrupled tax assessment on the clergy, dismissal of the director of the Moscow Yeshiva, and the disbanding of the Vaad Yeshiva, governing council of the Moscow Seminary.

Among the imprisoned Jewish leaders were Dr. Gedalia Rubinovich Pechersky, of Leningrad, and other ranking lay leaders of synagogues in the capitals of five Soviet republics. Little has appeared in the Soviet press about the anti-Jewish drive.

Many Jewish organizations have strongly protested the anti-Semitic acts by Soviet authorities but the Rabbinical Council is one of the few that has directed its appeal to the United Nations.

Others have been the Religious Zionists of America and the Jewish Labor Committee. The United Synagogue of America, representing 1.4 million Conservative Jews, has asked the United States to inquire into the arrests, says the New York Herald Tribune. Most Jewish groups have urged the Kremlin to stop them.

Rabbis of the Rabbinical Council have about 1.5 million people in their congregations, many of whom are just a generation or two away from Russia and some of whom bear painful memories of Nazi atrocities.

Mr. and Mrs. Alex Stroll, 2155 Scott Street, gave a dinner party, with fourteen guests, at their home, to celebrate the engagement of their daughter, Miss Joyce Stroll, to Ruby Kravitz, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ben. Kravitz, 5244 Mountain Sights Avenue. Mrs. Stroll wore a beige, knitted dress. Mrs. Kravitz was in a navy-blue silk sheath. Miss Stroll wore a black, knitted boucle sheath. The table adornment was a centerpiece of yellow and white carnations and roses. That evening twenty guests came in for tea; and some weeks later a party was given at home.

Mr. and Mrs. Irving Bucovetsky, 4977 Van Horne Avenue, celebrated the bar-mitzvah of their son, Sydney, who was called to the Reading of the Law, at Shomrim Laboker-Beth Yehuda-Shaare Tefillah Synagogue. He is the brother of Harvey and Myron Bucovetsky; grandson of Mrs. Martha Pappelbaum, 5246 Westbury Avenue, and the late Leon Pappelbaum; and of the late Mr. and Mrs. Chaim Bucovetsky. A luncheon in the Synagogue hall followed services. That evening Mr. and Mrs. Bucovetsky were hosts to eighty guests at a dinner reception at home. The table held a blue and white bar-mitzvah cake and blue and white carnations. At the same time Mr. and Mrs. Bucovetsky (nee Edith Pappelbaum), celebrated their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary. Here for the event were: Mrs. Ben. Bergstein, of Kitchener, Ont., aunt; Mr. and Mrs. Norman Stone, and Ellen, Marilyn, and Susan; and Miss Fagel Bucovetsky; cousins, all of Toronto, Ont.; and Mr. and Mrs. C. Schlein, of Elliott Lake, Ont.

Abraham Mislovitch, 11387 James Morrice Street, was honoured at a party in celebration of his eighty-fourth birthday, given by his children at the home of his son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. M. Fishman (Miriam), of that address. Mr. and Mrs. Mislovitch have two sons and daughters-in-law: Mr. and Mrs. Louis Mislovitch, 3765 Dupuis Avenue; Mr. and Mrs. Max Mislovitch, 5550 Victoria Avenue; eight sons-in-law and daughters: Mr. and Mrs. S. Cunningham (Rose), of Hamilton, Ont.; Mr. and Mrs. Moe Fishman (Miriam), 11387 James Morrice Street; thirty-five grandchildren; and eight great-grandchildren.

Mr. and Mrs. Joshua Kalles, 4732 Van Horne Avenue, celebrated the bar-mitzvah of their son, Fred, who was called to the Reading of the Law, at Adath Israel Synagogue. Kiddush was observed. The next evening Mr. and Mrs. Kalles were hosts to two hundred and twenty-five guests at a dinner dance in the Synagogue hall. Mrs. Kalles wore an off-white, peau de soie gown, appliqued with white beads; and had gold-coloured orchids pinned to her purse. Those who lit the candles were: Mr. and Mrs. Harry Kalles, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Riesberg, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Braitman, Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Litogorski, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Lichtenfeld, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Markowski, Mr. and Mrs. E. Lefkowich, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Strikowski, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Kalles; uncles and aunts; Mrs. Mania Silverstein, and Mrs. Agnes Levine, great-aunts; and Martin Kalles, Sydney Levine, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Shrieder, Mr. and Mrs. H. Sax, Mr. and Mrs. S. Hershfeld, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Kalles, and Mr. and Mrs. Morris Friedman, cousins. Seated at the head table with the family were: Rabbi and Mrs. Solomon J. Spiro, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Kalles, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Kalles, Mrs. Mania Silverstein, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Markowski, Mr. and Mrs. E. Lefkowich, and M. Mendelsohn. The bar-mitzvah boy spoke. Rabbi Spiro asked a blessing over the challah. The table decoration was a blue and gold-coloured bar-mitzvah cake and centerpieces of red and white carnations. Here for the occasion were: Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Kalles, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Kalles, Mr. and Mrs. E. Shrieder, Mr. and S. Hershfeld, Martin Kalles, M. Friedman, and Mr. and Mrs. H. Conference City Of Copenhagen Houses Museum Of Anti-Nazi Action

BY MONTY JACOBS, PRESS DIRECTOR OF THE WORLD JEWISH CONGRESS

No matter how tightly arranged conference schedules are, delegates, or some at least, take time out to see the sights, and that certainly will be the case when Jewish leaders from all over the world gather in Copenhagen for meetings of the World Jewish Congress Administrative Committee, Conference on Jewish Material Claims Against Germany, Conference of Jewish Organizations, and so on; to take place at the end of March. Copenhagen is a city of sights, a city of warm friendliness that will be as delighted to play host to the leaders of the World Jewish Congress and other groups as it was determined two decades ago to keep its 6,000 Jewish community from Nazi clutches.

The success of that epic decision, coupled with resolute resistance to the Nazis until war's end, is enshrined in one of the sights of the Danish capital, the Museum of the Danish Resistance Movement. The saga of Danish Jewry is known. The Danes refused to hand them over and, instead, ferried them to a haven in Sweden. Of the 6,000 Jews in the country, German search squads were able to find only the inmates of an old-age home. Denmark is a modest country, its people modest in attire, manner, and mood. But behind that mild and friendly exterior is a courage never more vividly displayed than in the years of the Hitler occupation.

Not too far from the Royal Palace at Amalienborg, and not too far from the famous statue of the Mermaid stands the Museum of the Resistance, recording for history the years of courage. When I first glimpsed that Museum, I felt for a moment that I was at the wrong place. Like the Danes, the building is modest in both design and extent. It is as if the Danes had said: Yes, we really should do something to chronicle that period in our history, but let's not make too much of a fuss about it. They haven't made a fuss about it, but they have planned and created, without undue melodrama, without any attempt at self-praise, as graphic a period museum as may be found anywhere in the world.

Guarding the approach to the building, a low, clean-lined structure with none of the massive pillars or adornments favored by museum-builders, is one of the armored cars with which the Danes mounted their resistance. It stands there as much a tribute to the underground smiths and mechanics who put it together as to the incredibly brave men who, surely aware that it offered cardboard defense against the Nazi firepower, rode it to raid and harry the enemy.

Inside, the Museum is a model of Danish planning. You go from panel to panel, from display to display, all leading to that great day when the Nazis were brought to bay and the agony of Europe was eased. There is the clandestine press which printed the underground news that circulated throughout Denmark; there is the secret workshop in which weapons were made and repaired; there is the ghastly exhibit of Nazi torture tools, the whips, clubs, screws, and knives which formed the arsenal of the Nazi security police.

And then there are the arms from the British arsenal, the machine guns, grenades, rifles, mines, radios, first-aid supplies that were dropped by British planes and received, through careful pre arrangement, by the Danish freedom fighters. With those weapons, the underground staged new actions, won new weapons, and so established themselves that they remained undefeated at the end of the war.

Of course, all the delegates to Copenhagen will want to see the Tivoli, that fabulous pleasure park, and they will want to see the royal palace, the old synagogue, the statue of Hans Christian Andersen, and the bronze ever-youthful Mermaid. But if there is anything that's really a must for those Jewish leaders while they are in the Danish capital, it is a visit to the Museum of the Resistance, which, apart from being a museum to the miracle of Danish durability, casts light on the character of the men and women whose refusal to surrender the Jews of Denmark was simply part of their automatic decision to refuse to surrender their freedoms to force of arms.

That museum will serve to highlight one of the issues that the World Jewish Congress leaders will discuss: the increase of anti-Semitism and the possible existence of an international Nazi organization. This, of course, is not the only issue the WJC leaders will cover, for high on the agenda are such matters as the situation of Soviet Jewry and the position of the Jews in North Africa.

Items Of Interest At The Jewish Theological Seminary

A twelve page manuscript, the only written description of the missing Pentateuch from the famed tenth century Aleppo Bible Codex, was discovered among manuscript fragments in the Library of The Jewish Theological Seminary of America. In disclosing the recent find, Dr. Simon Greenberg, vice-chancellor of the Seminary, stated that "the manuscript is a major contribution towards the publication of the first definitive edition of the Hebrew biblical text."

The manuscript was turned up during a treasure hunt for Bible manuscripts and fragments by Professor Moshe Goshen-Gottstein, visiting professor of Semitics at Brandeis University on leave from the Hebrew University of Jerusalem where he serves as general editor of the Hebrew University Bible Project. Professor Gottstein's search was generated by last year's surprise recovery of the Codex itself in Jerusalem after it was believed to have been destroyed in the pillaged synagogue of Aleppo, Syria, during that country's 1947 anti-Jewish riots. The Bible was found intact except for some torn-out pages of Pentateuch, and Professor Gottstein, who was responsible for much of the research on the Codex itself, has been hunting for material which would make possible a restoration of the missing pages.

The manuscript discovered and identified by Dr. Gottstein in the Seminary Library was written by Jacob Sapir, famous Jewish traveller of a century ago. Sapir, who examined the Aleppo Codex with considerable care about 1880, meticulously noted down in his precise Hebrew script the readings which he found there which were at variance with other Bible scrolls and codices with which he was familiar. The twelve page fragment contains the only clues so far discovered to the Pentateuch readings of this unique Codex. A codex is an ancient manuscript prepared in book rather than scroll form.

Through the ages, the importance and curiosity attached to this rarely viewed Codex by Christian, Jewish, and Mohammedan Hebrew scholars rests in its being the oldest and most authentic text of the Hebrew Scriptures now extant, and the only one executed by Aaron ben Asher (tenth century), the most celebrated of Massoretes. As an authority of the Massora, the tradition of writing, vocalizing, and annotating Bible texts, Aaron ben Asher devoted his life to the establishment of the correct text, which he arrived at through detailed studies of all contemporary manuscripts of the Hebrew Bible. The authenticity of this version was affirmed by Moses Maimonides, the twelfth century scholar renowned as the highest authority on Jewish legal matters, who regarded this as the exclusively correct Codex, and used it as the basis for his copy of the Torah.

During the sixteenth century, the Codex, after many wanderings was brought to Syria where it was eventually placed in the Old Synagogue of Aleppo. The Aleppo community so revered this work that they rarely permitted more than three scholars to view it within any one century. The announcement therefore, earlier this year by Mr. Isaac Ben Zvi, president of the State of Israel, that the Codex is now available for research and will be made the basis of the great Bible edition of the Hebrew University, has stimulated the interest of Bible scholars throughout the world.

The one regret was that when this important document was finally made available for study, it was no longer complete. The newly-discovered manuscript will help scholars to reconstruct the Pentateuch, the missing portion of the Codex, and will thus help immeasurably not only in the preparation of the new, definitive edition, but also in all future attempts to interpret Bible texts and versions. The Library of The Jewish Theological Seminary of America houses the largest collection of Hebraica and Judaica in the world.

A summary and survey of over a half century of research on the Cairo Genizah was evaluated by Jewish scholars at the Elkan Nathan Adler centennial celebration held by the Library. The lecturers who contributed insights from the documentary, historical, and literary viewpoints were Doctors S. D. Goitein, Professor of Arabic, University of Pennsylvania; Abraham S. Halkin, Professor of Hebrew, College of the City of New York; and Moses Zucker, Associate Professor of Talmud at the Seminary.

The Genizah collection which initially consisted of some 40,000 manuscript fragments ranging from an inch to a whole page in size, and dating from the eighth to the 13th centuries, were found by Dr. Adler in a storage room of an old synagogue in the town of Forstat, just outside Cairo, Egypt. Though a lawyer by profession, Dr. Adler was sufficiently steeped in Jewish scholarship to recognize that this Genizah was a veritable treasure house of little-known or lost works of first rate importance.

In 1896, together with Solomon Schechter, of Cambridge University, who later became the Seminary's second president, and other celebrated scholars, Dr. Adler gained the permission of the Jewish community of Forstat to remove the fragments for safekeeping and to place them at the disposal of scholars. The major portion was deposited in the Library of Cambridge University, and the balance included amongst Dr. Adler's private collection. Through the subsequent acquisition of the selected items of Elkan Adler's library, the Library at the Seminary acquired more than 10,000 of these fragments in addition to a vast collection of other major works.

Citing the wealth of documentary evidence in the Genizah, Dr. Goitein pointed out that his research in this area yielded documents which refuted formerly held concepts concerning lack of communication between the Mediterranean area, India, and the Near East during the Middle Ages and has led to a total reconstruction of the history of trade during that period.

"Historically speaking," said Dr. Halkin in his talk, "the Genizah not only awakens us to events whose existence we have never before known but casts new light upon important personalities and events of which only limited prior knowledge has existed." Illustrating his first point, Dr. Halkin revealed the existence of a major earthquake in Israel during the year 748 or 749 whose effects were so extensive as to be a primary cause of the decline of learning in Palestine in that era.

Dr. Moses Zucker, whose scholarly specialty is the work of Saadia Gaon, a Jewish sage, spoke of the literary value of the Genizah. He cited, for example, his reconstruction of close to 1,000 pages of Saadia Gaon's 10,000 page commentary on the Torah as well as 500 pages of his polemical works. Dr. Zucker also disclosed the discovery of another prolific author, Samuel, the son of Hafni, who lived during the late 10th or early 11th century. Although best known for his writing of the first introduction to the Talmud, not one line of Samuel's works had been seen since his era until Dr. Zucker's recognition of his writings among the dispersed fragments. "We knew of the existence of Samuel's books only through scant quotations in other authors' works," said Dr. Zucker. "Today, through the Genizah we have fragments of all of his books." Dr. Zucker also stressed that the Genizah literary material is important for the information it offers us on the close intellectual relationship between the Jewish and Moslem world during the ninth, 10th, and 11th centuries.

Although scholars in varying specialties of Jewish studies have examined the manuscript fragments, 60 per cent of those in the Seminary's collection still remain unidentified or unclassified.

The Aim Of The Jewish Public Library Of Toronto

BY MRS. LYN HARRINGTON, 12 CASTLE VIEW AVENUE, TORONTO, ONTARIO, OF THE CANADIAN LIBRARY WEEK COUNCIL, INC.

For the fourth time, Canadian Library Week is just being celebrated in libraries across Canada. Jewish libraries also celebrate an entire month as Jewish Library Month. The Jewish Public Library in Toronto has an extra reason for rejoicing this spring. It will move from cramped dingy quarters in downtown Toronto to a spacious new building much farther north in the city.

When the Jewish Public Library was first founded, it was in the midst of the Toronto Jewish community. But the drift northward of Jews has become accentuated in recent years. Although serious library users will go any distance for material they need, casual readers want the library close by. The majority of those who use the Jewish Public Library are thus students, high school and university, adults writing a thesis, or women preparing material for a lecture. It is not confined to Jewish readers, for the library is open to all. Anyone can become a member for three dollars per year, and a borrower by paying ten cents for a library card.

Indeed, this library acts as a bridge between Jew and Gentile, a sort of good public relations in itself. Inquirers at the Toronto Reference Library are directed to this library when a question on Jewish lore cannot be answered there. For the Jewish Public Library does not duplicate the bookstock of the Toronto Public Libraries, where Jewish literature is merely incidental.

"I am always interested in knowing what brings a Gentile reader to this library," Rabbi Dr. Israel Frankel, the librarian, admits. "Some have wanted to understand the Jews better, since they live among us. Others want to understand the Christian religion better, since it has such strong Jewish background." Dr. Frankel is himself the author of "Peshat (Plain Exegesis) in Talmudic and Midrashic Literature," published in 1956 by the La Salle Press in Toronto. Born in Poland, Dr. Frankel later moved to Dublin, Ireland, where he received his doctorate at Trinity College.

After thirteen years in Ireland, Dr. Frankel came to Canada in 1950, and was engaged in the Zionist Movement for the next six years. He felt strongly that the Jewish Library was not filling its function in educating people. When he became librarian in 1950, he immediately set about re-organizing the library, keeping it open from noon to eight o'clock, six days a week. It has become a vital force in the Jewish community, as a result. Circulation figures are deceptive, for such a library has greater influence than statistics would indicate.

"We are glad, just the same, of the rising circulation," says Dr. Frankel. "It has jumped enormously, of course, at least twenty-two times what it was previously. But a more significant figure is that approximately eight thousand people used the reference section in the past year."

The library has a strong reference collection of encyclopedias and rabbinical writings. The bookstock of some eight thousand volumes of fiction and non-fiction is strictly on Jewish subjects. The writing may be Yiddish, Hebrew, or English.

The Yiddish collection is chiefly used by newcomers to Canada and by older immigrants who had no opportunity to become facile in the other languages. The Hebrew collection receives increased circulation because the language is taught in Jewish schools and in widespread use in Israel. However, the emphasis is increasingly on books in English. This is the largest collection of Jewish books in Ontario. The Jewish Public Library on Esplanade Avenue, in Montreal, however, is both larger and older.

Dr. Frankel is much encouraged by the young borrowers. "They lean toward non-fiction," he reports. "They seem to prefer books of history and biography to fiction. Mind you, our fiction is of quality, no trash in it! But our young people seem to want books that will make them good citizens."

A library building is only a shell; books only furniture standing in rows. To make it come alive requires the warm, welcoming spirit, in fact a real missionary zeal, a love of books and people, and faith in what books can do. The Toronto Jewish Library has just such a librarian. "We have committed a crime," he says warmly, "in not making libraries as attractive as, well, as even a barbershop! We should advertise our wares as ardently as a manufacturer of soft drinks. To attract students, Jews and others, to spread culture, particularly Jewish culture, that's our aim."

Rabbi Frankel is working on that thesis. The new quarters of the Jewish Public Library in Toronto will glitter amid marble floors and plate glass, on basement and first floor of the new building. The second storey will be occupied by offices of the Bureau of Jewish Education. Another five thousand books will be purchased, now that there is space to house them. The staff of two will expand slightly.

Fortunately for the future of the Jewish Public Library, it does not rest entirely upon the enthusiasm of one learned librarian. Dr. Frankel has a sound library board under Bert Godfrey, the president. Vice-presidents are David Green, Julius Hayman, and Louis Lockshin, who is also chairman of the building committee. The treasurer is Morley Katz; and honorary secretary, Shelley S. Jackson.

"They all care greatly about the future of the library," Dr. Frankel says earnestly. "We are, of course, a member agency of the United Jewish Welfare Fund." Dr. Frankel has other dreams, as well. He hopes eventually to acquire rare volumes of Jewish lore; to set up branch libraries in various Jewish communities; to persuade city government that the Jewish Public Libraries are worthy of tax support.

"All this will cost money, yes. But what is money for if not for the purpose of reaching people? And what nobler use for money than providing books?" he asks.

★CANADIAN JEWISH★ CONGRESS

Has arranged for Cuban Jewry to receive customary Passover supplies, through Sigmund Unterberg, assistant treasurer, due to an appeal in December from representatives of the Cuban Jewish community, similar to that of last year. Until two years ago all traditional Passover food had been bought in the U.S., but owing to severed relations between Cuba and the U.S. supplies are no longer available from the U.S. Moe Leavitt, executive vice-chairman of the Joint Distribution Committee in New York, agreed with the Congress and arrangements were made for 13,000 pounds of matzoth; 6,000 pounds of matzoth meal; 60 cases of kosher wine; and 125 pounds of horse-radish to be shipped to Havana from a company in Israel because no matzoth are manufactured in Canada and it was not possible to obtain an export permit from the Canadian Government to ship American goods to Cuba. These have been shipped from Israel to New York and will be transported by truck to Saint John, N.H., to a boat bound for Havana. The Cuban Jewish community has been able to secure the necessary import permit. This community numbers approximately 6,000 individuals, most of them in Havana. Although the regime is free from anti-Semitic policies, since Castro assumed power in 1950, manufacturing concerns employing four or more individuals have been confiscated and Cuban Jewry has been affected by the emigration of at least half of its community.

CLASS IN COOKERY

CHOCOLATE ROLL

six eggs
six tablespoons cocoa one-half teaspoon almond extract one-half cup plus two tablespoons sugar
two tablespoons sugar
one teaspoon vanilla
one cup heavy whipping cream
two teaspoons rum or one teaspoon rum extract chocolate shavings

Heat oven to 350 degrees. Grease a fifteen-inch by ten-inch by one-inch cookie sheet lined with wax paper. Grease the wax paper. Separate eggs and beat yolks until thick and creamy. Do not under-beat. Add sugar gradually and continue beating until smooth. Stir in cocoa, vanilla, and almond extract. Beat egg whites until they hold precise points; then gently fold into cocoa mixture. Spread on cookie sheet and bake for twenty-five minutes or until cake pulls away from sides of pan. Sprinkle a clean tea towel with icing sugar. Remove cake from oven and invert pan over sugared towel. Peel away the wax paper gently. Roll cake in towel while still warm; and cover with wax paper. Cool. Filling: Whip the cream and two tablespoons sugar until thick; add rum and stir gently. When cake is completely cool, unroll it and fill with the whipped cream, saving some for decorating. Roll up again and decorate with whipped cream and chocolate shavings.

Molly Picon's MISH-MASH

We all have at least one relative from the old country whose life is a continuous struggle with the English language. In our family, it was Grandma. I remember watching her put up her own jams and jellies, then reading some of the fascinating labels she put on the jars, like "Blegberra," "Rezberra" and other strange sounding fruits. Yes, she was quite a balabusteh, my grandmother. Besides being a bustling homemaker, she was also a socialite, businesswoman, mother, and it shouldn't be a total loss, a charter member of Hadassah.

One morning she said, "Molly, today I'm going to a launching." "Well," I thought, "Grandma gets around, but you really have to be somebody important, like the governor's wife, to get invited to a launching." Then I realized what she meant. "Grandma," I said, "not launching, luncheon." "That's exactly what I said, launching. I never could pronounce my W's so good."

Whether you pronounce it "launching" or "luncheon," one way to make it a smash hit is to serve the girls a salad plate made with Rokeach Rings O'Whitefish. It's an all white-fish gefilte fish, the finest you can buy. That you can be sure of because Rokeach has been making gefilte fish since 1870, and they're past masters. Arrange the fish on a bed of lettuce, put a radish rose in the center of each ring, garnish with carrot curlicues, parsley sprigs . . . be real artistic. You didn't think I had such fancy ideas about food, did you? I may be a journalist, but after all, I'm a woman, too.

Molly

P.S. If you can't find Rokeach products where you shop, just write to me. Give me the name of the store, and I'll see to it that they stock Rokeach from now on.

Bat-Mitzvah In Subotica

News of the re-dedication of the synagogue in Belgrade, twenty years after its destruction by the Nazis during World War II, has tended to overshadow the re-opening of another synagogue in Yugoslavia, a much smaller one, in Subotica, at about the same time.

There are now 6,500 Jews living in Yugoslavia, a fragment of the 76,000 who inhabited the country when the war broke out. The Nazi occupation cost the life of 62,000 Jews, or 82% of the entire population. After the war, more than 8,000 Yugoslav Jews emigrated to Israel.

Subotica lies in the extreme northeastern corner of the country, and has an overall population of 115,400 and a Jewish population of 420. In the city there are ten Jewish girls of confirmation age. The tiny Jewish community, in celebration of the reopening of their centuries-old synagogue, decided that the highlight of their re-dedication ceremonies would be the bat-mitzvah of these girls. Regretfully there were no boys in that age group to participate in the dedication. In the years since the end of the war only one male child observed his bar-mitzvah in Subotica. The ten grew to fifteen because three girls of the same age group were discovered in nearby Novi-Sad and two more in the little town of Vrabas.

It was a beautiful occasion. The girls were lovely in their white dresses. The Israeli Ambassador to Yugoslavia gave a touching and stirring address. Because females cannot be called up to read from the Torah, the girls took turns in reading portions from the Prophets. Each girl carried a flower in her hand and each one of them had around her neck a silver Mogen David, star of David, presented to her by the Joint Distribution Committee as a gift from the Jews of America.

In the immediate post-war years the JDC was caring for 9,000 Jews in Yugoslavia, with funds provided by the United Jewish Appeal. The community has recovered sufficiently since then to take over a large part of its own welfare program, which is administered by the Yugoslavian Federation of Jewish Communities and subsidized by JDC and Claims Conference grants. Because so many of the survivors are aged and helpless, the principal welfare institution in the country is the home for the aged in Zagreb.

Survival, however, is not enough for the Jews of Yugoslavia. They wish to survive as Jews and to that end they have devoted a large part of their efforts and of their own financial means, as well as monies received from JDC and Claims Conference funds, to promoting Jewish life throughout Yugoslavia. They are organizing Jewish youth clubs, Jewish student groups, summer camps where for several weeks each year young Jews can live together and, as part of their daily life, observe Jewish traditions and study Judaism.

In addition, the community has been utilizing JDC and Claims Conference funds to rebuild synagogues which were destroyed during the Nazi occupation and left neglected all these years because the needs for physical welfare had to be given priority.

Jack Guss, of Saint John, N.B., is one of the fifteen Canadians selected by the Department of Trade and Commerce for the trade delegation to Israel. Mr. Guss went to Ottawa, Ont., where the delegation was briefed by federal authorities before flying to Tel Aviv. Its purpose, said the Hon. George Hees, Minister of Trade and Commerce, is to explore the market in Israel for heavy equipment, forest products, consumer goods, and engineering services. The delegation will remain there until March 30, touring installations and observing conditions. On their return, members will prepare a formal report, and through their respective associations, pass on specific trade information to prospective Canadian exporters. This will be one of twenty-three such trade delegations to foreign countries planned during the current year, by the federal department of trade and commerce. Mr. Guss recently returned from Israel where he made an earlier tour on behalf of a Canadian investment group. On the current trip, he will represent the Canadian Ingersoll Rand Co., Limited.

SCHWARTZ-GAMEROFF

The marriage of Miss Myrna Iris Gameroff, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Gameroff, 4910 Mira Road, to Irwin Leonard Schwartz, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. Schwartz, of Moncton, N. B., and of Montreal, was solemnized at Shaare Zion Synagogue, on February 25, at half-past five o'clock, by Rabbi Maurice S. Cohen, assisted by Rabbi Stanley Bercovitch, of Bristol, Pennsylvania. Why Do Some Jews Fail To Grasp Israel Immigrant Problems?

Shocked disbelief at the continued failure of some American Jews to understand the acute immigration problems facing Israel, is contained in an eye-witness report made by an American official on assignment there in behalf of the Jewish Agency for Israel, Inc., a beneficiary agency of the United Jewish Appeal. In a letter to Gottlieb Hammer, executive vice-chairman of the Jewish Agency for Israel, Inc., the official expressed wonder that there are still American Jews who ask "Is there really an immigration emergency in Israel?" How in the world can the American Jewish community fail to understand the problem in Israel?" the official asked.

"The other day I went to Haifa to see a ship-load of immigrants arrive. It had been chartered especially for the purpose by the Jewish Agency. The Agency officials went out in a boat at 5.30 a.m. to meet the ship, which docked at 7 a.m. By 1 p.m. more than 20 busloads of newcomers had been dispatched to some 14 places and the job was still far from finished.

"I stood for a while on the loading ramp listening to the Agency men calling out their directions: 'Eilat ready to go'; 'loading for Kiryat Shmona'; 'loading for Ashdod'; 'baggage tender for Hazor'; 'station wagon to Ezra Ve' bizaron'. It was as if the whole map of Israel was coming alive to absorb these people, including towns which did not even exist a few years ago, a whole country alive with the dynamics of absorption.

"Maybe it is one of the drawbacks of the smooth techniques worked out by our people that American tourists are not ordinarily aware of all this movement and urgency. The buses, ordinary Egged buses, roll along the highway, people get off, take their baggage, move into their new homes and within a few hours look as if they had been there for months or even years.

"But if you have stayed in the country a little longer and have traveled around a bit, you will stand on this loading platform in Haifa harbor and the destination of each bus will call up a thought or image in your mind:

"Kiryat Shmona, eight of ten breadwinners unemployed during the four winter months; Hazor, employment problems all year round; Ashdod, temporary asbestos units of 42 square meters for families with five or six children.

"You stand and you think of each place and of the Agency people who work there right now setting up beds and equipment. And you think of tomorrow morning when the Agency's offices will open in each of these places for long lines of people, each one a different story, each one a different set of problems. You wonder how they are going to cope with the problems of 1,000 people tomorrow morning.

"Then, tomorrow morning, you come back to your own office and you find a letter telling you that there is no sense of emergency surrounding the U.J.A. campaign and you ask yourself: who's got the story wrong, they or I? Only, in your own mind you don't put it quite so politely."

The Views Of Judaism On God And Salvation

Judaism is "not a closed religious fellowship" but a faith that "opens its door wide to anyone who shares its point of view and wishes to join," a leading Committee of the Central Conference of American Rabbis declared as it disclosed that many persons of non-Jewish birth have been inquiring about Judaism. Rabbi Joshua O. Haberman, of Temple Har Sinai, in Trenton, N.J., chairman of the body's Committee on The Unaffiliated, reported that "members of the Central Conference of American Rabbis have sensed a growing interest in Judaism and its teachings. Inquiries about Judaism have been coming from both Jews and non-Jews. In reply to these inquiries, the Central Conference, through its Committee on The Unaffiliated, has been supplying two basic statements setting forth Judaism's view of God and Judaism's teaching about salvation."

The Central Conference of American Rabbis, with headquarters at 40 West 68th Street, New York, is the rabbinical organization of the Reform branch of Judaism. It is made up of over 800 rabbis and is the oldest rabbinical body in the world.

In its statement on Judaism's view of God, the Committee declares: "Believing in God is easy, far easier than assuming that this vast, intricate, yet well ordered universe came into being by mere chance. However, belief in God is hardly the basis or essence of Judaism, any more than believing that I have a father is the most important part of my relationship with my human parent. Understanding him is quite important. Loving him is even more important. And most important of all is what I do to show my love, as well as to deserve his love. This, says Judaism, is the behavior that makes a man holy as God is holy."

"When evil days come and the world seems to run amok with cruelty and violence," the statement continues, "the pertinent question to raise is not: 'Where now is God?' but 'Where am I, His child and His partner in the endless labor of creation, His divine instrument of comfort and healing?' God's kingdom and His ways are yours to build. He has provided all the necessary construction materials, including you, with all your divine endowments of strength, intelligence, imagination, and resourceful ingenuity."

"In Judaism, we approach God directly. We do not approach him through any intermediary. We believe that all are children of God. All are equal in His sight. Every man is a son of God, fashioned in His image.

"Judaism teaches that God is uniquely and indivisibly one. Not many, as polytheism contends. Nor three, as some would have it. He is One, without initial date or end; one ethical, unique, indivisible Lord of the universe. Judaism welcomes into its religious fellowship anyone who shares these beliefs.

"God is more than an idea, a thought, or a concept. He enters into the life of every individual as his redeemer, helper, protector, father, and friend. To experience relief from sorrow, suffering, disappointment, and defeat; to know healing, consolation, restoration, to find strength and courage for living is to know God. To know God and to feel redeemed are one and the same experience. The God of Judaism is not alone the author, but also the meaning, of all existence. To care for his children is to worship Him truly. To labor for a better world is to do His will. To strive unceasingly for inner light and to seize the opportunities for service which each day and hour bring is to be consecrated, redeemed, saved."

In its statement on Judaism's view of salvation, the Committee states further: "The religion of Israel teaches that salvation is both personal and social. Judaism is as concerned with the welfare of mankind as it is with the inner life and thought of each separate soul. Indeed, the prophets of Israel seem, if anything, far more concerned with social righteousness than with individual salvation. Personal salvation, as we understand it, is not a supernatural event or experience. The promise of heaven or the threat of hell figure virtually not at all in modern Jewish theology. The reward of virtue is the inner satisfaction gained from the doing of the virtuous act itself. In fact, if virtue were compensated in some other way, in the coin either of material or spiritual reward, where would be the virtue in virtue?

"Salvation in Judaism is the joyous sense of being a concerned and helpful brother to one's fellow man and thus a dutiful son and obedient servant of God, the Father of us all.

"Realistically, this attitude toward existence accounts, we believe, for the Jew's intensely active participation in all the healing arts: welfare movements, peace efforts, and the problems of social justice.

"In Judaism, the test and standard of holiness are not a man's words and resolutions, but his actions; not his declared belief, but his dedicated behavior; not his confessional creed, but his consecrated conduct; not his theological dogma but his human deed. Judaism recognizes that there are many doors to salvation. It opens its own door wide to anyone who shares our point of view and wishes to join our religious fellowship."

Bequest Of $2 Million Goes To Institution Without Prejudice Against Jewish Students

Thanks to a unique bequest from the late Mrs. Sophie D. Cohen, a prominent philanthropist, whose husband, William W. Cohen, headed a brokerage firm and served in the U.S. Congress from 1927-29 as the representative from the 17th New York (Silk Stocking) District, New York Medical College, and Flower and Fifth Avenue Hospitals will start construction on a new $6,000,000 research building in December, 1961, it was announced by Dr. Ralph E. Snyder, president and dean of the institution.

The Cohen bequest of approximately $2,000,000 constitutes the largest source of private funds for the new building, which will be named the Sophie D. and William W. Cohen Research Building. In her will, the late Mrs. Cohen stated her reason for assigning half of her residuary estate to the college, as follows: "It has come to my attention that the New York Medical College, Flower and Fifth Avenue Hospitals, in New York City, is an institution that does not discriminate against Jewish students and selects its student body from among those most qualified, and has among it a very large percentage of Jewish students who are fully capable and equipped, and that its faculty is likewise chosen upon the same principles."

During their lifetime, the Cohens were long-time benefactors of New York Medical College and its service hospital, Flower and Fifth Avenue Hospitals. During the period 1953-1959 they supported an extensive series of research studies at the College and the Metropolitan Hospital Center through their foundation. These included a major geriatric study, the first in the field of "normals" 80-100 years old, which revealed that a number of degenerative biochemical and physical processes which increase with age go into reverse between the "threshold ages" of 60 and 75, leading to a "golden age" of physical condition. The studies were conducted by a research team headed by Dr. A. Allen Goldbloom, clinical professor of medicine at the College, who was the Cohens' personal physician and friend for many years.

They also established the Sophie D. and William W. Cohen Student Loan Fund at New York Medical College in addition to other gifts.

Construction of the new research building will mark the first major step in the development of New York Medical College into a medical "university" which will offer educational opportunities in all the medical sciences and related fields, Dr. Snyder said. He noted that the College has already opened a School of Graduate Nursing and holds charters for a Dental School and a School of Public Health. "Ultimately," he said, "we will give degrees in such fields as anatomy, biochemistry, and pathology. We will train pharmacist, physical therapists, X-ray technicians."

With a student enrollment of over 500 and a faculty of almost 1,000, New York Medical College is one of the largest medical schools in the U.S. Its faculty staffs the 3,500 bed Metropolitan Hospital Center, one of the largest in the country, which consists of the college, its associated voluntary hospital, Flower and Fifth Avenue Hospitals, as well as two city hospitals, Metropolitan Hospital and Bird S. Coler Hospital and Home.
